TOWN TALK

By THE MAN ABOUT TOWN.

This is a great little country. Here the House of Representatives has voted a ten thousand dollar statue to the memory of Kamehameha the Third when economy is the cry and we want more money than is in sight. But be ye not alarmed, my brethren, it is a measure which might rightfully come under the title of Mutual Back Scratching. A goodly number of Hawaiian members wanted the statue because the Kamehameha Third Society, or whatever its right name is, wanted it, so all the Honorable Representatives agreed for the very substantial reason that if they had not it would have been very difficult to get certain other and necessary measures passed, and there would have been more difficulty in handling the appropriation bill. It makes me think of taking a man to a dinner and the theater and for an auto ride and getting him half jagged when you want to get him in condition to lend you some money or do you some other favor.

The claim is that Kamehameha the Third was a great man at opening public lands to the people. Granted, but the ten thousand dollars would do more good in the public land line today than the same amount will accomplish in decorating the capitol grounds with a monument.

I got a letter from a friend in the East the other day (yes, she was of the feminine gender) in which she told me of a little saying in the play "Kitty Grey" in which Julia Sanderson says: "A man's wife is like government bonds. He is sure of his two and a half per cent and no more. That's why men speculate." It is rather cynical, but I wonder how much truth there is in it. I once had a girl tell me something of the same kind when speaking of men in general. Her views were that so long as a man never had absolutely the full possession of a woman he was bound to have it, but that in 999 cases out of a hundred, a week or two of full possession dulled not only fondness but even the satisfaction of possession. I wish some married men would give me their views on this subject.

Mary Atcherley always did have a soft spot in her heart for newspaper men and it has grown even mushy now. The cause of this was on April 1 in the Senate. She came in during the afternoon session and sat down very quietly. Some of the members of the press were struck by a happy thought, to please her and execute a little joke at the same time. Senator Kalama was selected for the first victim. A note was handed to the Senate messenger with instructions to give to the senator from Maui, but not to let him know whence it came. The note purported to be from Mary and requested an interview.

Kalama brushed his hair with one hand and his flowing beard with the other and strolled towards where the lady sat, then motioning her to step outside the Chamber. When he returned with a puzzled look in his eyes a few moments later he found a paper labeled "April Fool" on his desk.

Then Kalama started things. The Senate had adjourned by that time and Palmer Woods was his first victim. He felt to the trick and held a prolonged conversation with Mary, who did not realize where her sudden popularity had its start. Hardly had he started to rise to go when the President of the Senate, W. O. Smith, approached and took the seat which he had vacated. Senator McCarthy was the final victim. If the members had stayed in the chamber long enough they would all have been on the calling list, but the end finally came, while the victims were joshed by their friends.
